

Dichroic Polymer Materials List

This is a complete list to create all four types of dichroic polymer in this demonstration.

Type 1- Cellophane

Type 2- Opaque Foils

Type 3- Chameleon Flakes

Type 4- Silkscreen

- Iridescent cellophane wrap

- Iridescent foil

- Colored metallic foil

- Chameleon/Color Change Flake/Powder NOT metallic glitter

- No VOCs UV Resin

- Eastwood Full Gloss Hotcoat Powder I will demonstrate this

- CrystaLac Brite Tone

- Metallic (any color) foil leaf (optional), the kind that tries to drift away and stick to things easily

- Your usual tools

- Black and translucent clays

- Translucent liquid clay

- Your favorite UV Resin OR your favorite gloss clear coat (Liquid clay, Hotcoat, Brit Tone, etc.)

- Small design silkscreens and acrylic paint (optional)

- Jewelry findings (optional)

- Flat back clear glass dome cabochons (optional)

- Heat gun (optional but necessary if using Hotcoat)

Maria's Dichroic Polymer Source List

This is a comprehensive list for making all the types of Dichroic Polymer I've created. These are the same products I use but not necessarily the same brands. Please note that the colored metallic foils I use are not metallic foil cardstock or paper and not the rub-on & rip-off-the-backing-kind of foil. If the description says 'iridescent' that really means iridescent; non-iridescent foils will not give the faux dichroic glass look.

You don't need everything on this list to participate in making Type 1, the most basic dichroic polymer. You'll only need black clay, iridescent wrapping cellophane, translucent liquid clay, and UV resin or other topcoat.

Iridescent Cellophane Wrap (the cheapest, thinnest cellophane you can find, any color)
